Federal Bureau Predicts Below Zero Records for Ogden

Winter cold records were again equalled shortly after 3 o'clock this morning when the mercury in the official thermometer at the city hall dropped to the 8-degree below zero point. At 4 o'clock the mercury rose to the 9-degree point, where it remained until shortly after 7 o'clock, when it began gradually to rise.

Colder temperatures are forecasted for tonight by the United States weather bureau, and the prediction is made that the mercury will fall below the zero mark. A cold wave is also expected in the southern section of the state and temperatures there will reach below zero, according to the weather bureau.

Clear skies are promised for tonight and tomorrow. Yesterday's maximum temperature in Ogden was 8 degrees.

DENVER, Colo., Jan. 18.—The cold weather of the winter hit the rocky mountain region last night and today, with the mercury at low marks for the year. Wyoming and Montana reported temperatures from ten to 20 degrees below zero today, while in Denver the government reading at 8 o'clock this morning was four degrees below.

The cold wave, accompanied by a light snow, extended from Canada to Northern Arizona, and Northern Texas, according to the district weather bureau here, which predicted below zero temperatures in virtually all the Rocky mountain territory.

Reports to the weather bureau showed readings of 20 degrees below zero at Billings, Mont. last night, and 19 below today at Cheyenne, Wyo.

The storm swept south and west from the northern Pacific coast, according to the forecast, and was caused by low barometric depression in that region.

DISCUSS ROAD CONNECTIONS

San Francisco Conference Takes Up Instate Highway Problem

Road connections between various states was the principal subject discussed at the meeting of road officials at San Francisco last week, according to E. J. Finch, district engineer of the United States bureau of public roads, who returned to Ogden from the coast Tuesday afternoon.

Finch represented the twelfth district. Thomas Maddock, state engineer of Arizona and George W. Borden state engineer of Nevada, attended the conference as state representatives. A. B. Fletcher was the representative for California.

One of the chief problems discussed at the conference was the connection of the Arrowhead trail in Southern Nevada and eastern California.

The proposed Boulder dam east of Las Vegas on the Colorado river, would flood part of the present highway and this may require an entire new location for the Arrowhead trail through Southern Nevada, Mr. Finch stated. This was one of the only questions on which the states failed to agree, principally due to the fact that this dam is yet to be built.

SAN JUAN OFFICIALS APPLY FOR ROAD AID

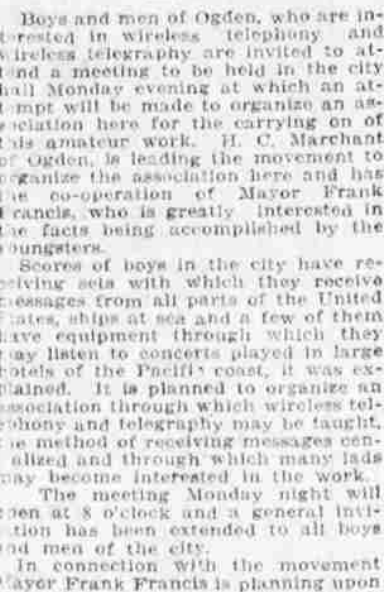

J. H. Wood, G. W. Perkins and Bert Callaway, county commissioners from San Juan county, met with Assistant District Forester R. E. Gery of the department of lands yesterday afternoon relative to securing federal aid for the construction of a roadway from Blanding to the natural bridges in San Juan county.

They called attention to the fact that if the roadway is constructed it will open up territory that is at present inaccessible. They also pointed out that it would make accessible approximately 50,000,000 feet of timber in the La Sal national forest, and they also said that it would make possible the cultivation of a large area of dry farm land which at present is lying idle.

Their request for federal co-operation for the construction of the roadway on which work is now being done, was referred to the engineering department.
